Returns-Dr. Depew Salls To-day.

The sailing of the Kronprinz Wilhelm of the North German Lloyd Line and the Von Moltke of the Hamburg-American Line, made a gala day in Hoboken yester-Flags were out and the streets were filled with the voyagers and their friends. Every saloon had an extra bartender and fakirs thronged the streets selling flags

The Kronprinz got the signal for the start half an hour late, so great was the crush of friends on the ship. She took away 450 in the first cabin, 300 in the second and 500 in the steerage. There were at least four friends for each pas-When the Kronprinz pulled out she was a-flutter with flags and handkerchiefs. From a distance the people on her decks seemed to be grouped pyramidfashion with a little Miss Harriman at the apex waving good-by with a big American flag to a group of girl friends as long as she could keep them in sight.

E. H. Harriman sailed on the Kronprinz He was accompanied by his children Mary, Caroline and Averil. Mrs. Harriman ex-

He was accompanied by his children Mary, Caroline and Averil. Mrs. Harriman expects to follow her husband later. Mr. Harriman had Capt. Richter's private suite. He is convalescing after an operation for appendicitis. He and his family arrived only a few minutes before the ship sailed. Awaiting him on board was James Stillman, president of the National City Bank, and most of the time before the departure Mr. Harriman spent with Mr. Stillman. To a Sun reporter Mr. Harriman said that he expected to be gone three months and that he was feeling decidedly better.

"My illness was a good deal exaggerated, anyway," said he. "It isn't such an awful thing to have that bothersome appendix taken out, and I got through it nicely. The relief I feel at having it out is worth all that I went through. I'm going to Paris and will spend quite a time in France and then go where fancy takes me. It's a regular vacation, and the man who mentions business to me gets shot. I haven't been paying any attention to business since I became ill, and all that I know I've got from reading the papers. So you see I'm not a competent authority any more to talk on the market, and please don't ask me any questions about it, because that'll spoil my vacation and send me away with a bad taste in my mouth."

"How about Union Pacific?" suggested a reporter.
"It's all right," said Mr. Harriman, "I

"How about Union Pacific?" suggested a reporter.

"It's all right," said Mr. Harriman, "I bought some of it yesterday. That's all I've got to say about that."

Mr. Harriman said he would probably spend a good deal of his time automobiling. "That seems to be the popular way of spending a vacation nowadays," he said.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Vanderlip, who were married in Chicago on May 20, were also passengers on the Kronprinz. One of the last to bid them good-by was E. W. Harden, who has been Mr. Vanderlip's friend from boyhood and who has a peculiar interest in their trip up till their arrival at Paris. Mr. Harden pays the bills to that point because it was so stipulated in a bet which he and Mr. Vanderlip made many years ago before either of them thought of getting married, under the terms of which the man left a bachelor should pay the expenses of the other's wedding trip as far as Paris. Mr. Vanderlip, who is now vice-president of the City Bank, will visit France and the Mediterranean.

Ambassador and Mrs. Choate got a stateroom that had been given up at the last minute. Mr. Choat had come over to attend the wedding of his son and felt constrained to return on first ship he could get. His vacation will probably be spent in Europe later.

HELD FOR NIECE'S DEATH. Neighbors Say Aunt Beat the T-Year-Old Girl Severely.

Florence Williams, 25 years old, colored, of 523 Waverly avenue, Brooklyn, is under arrest in Brooklyn on suspicion of having caused the death of her orphan niece, Ida Hoffman, 7 years old, which occurred on Monday.

The girl had been under the care of her aunt since the death of her parents two years ago. Six weeks ago she fell from a chair and injured her head so severely that she had to be taken to the Long Island College Hospital. Since she left the hospital two weeks ago the neighbors say that her aunt had frequently beaten her with a machine strap.

The accused woman says that whatever chastisement she gave to her niece was very slight and that as soon as she found that the girl was seriously ill a physician was promptly summoned.

She will be held, pending the Coroner's investigation

SURGEON BARBER'S WIFE SUES Divorce, Naming Her Bridesmald -Husband in the Navy.

Mrs. Belle Bemis Barber has begun an action in the Supreme Court for an absolute divorce from Naval Surgeon George Hol-comb Barber, whom she married at Washington, D. C., in December, 1895. Mrs. Barber names as corespondent Miss Louise Walker, who was a bridesmaid at her wedding and who, according to Robert L. Turk, Mrs. Barber's lawyer, is a relative of a naval officer. Supreme Court Justice Clarke gave permission yesterday to Mr. Turk to serve Surgeon Barber with the summons and complaint by publication.
Surgeon Barber is now at the United States training station, Coaster's Harbor Island, Narragansett, R. I. He will defend the Narragansett, R. I. He will defend the action.

The couple were married from the home of Mrs. Barber's sister, Mrs. Edward M. Wight. They went to Glastonbury, Conn., where Barber was born, for their honeymoon, but in a few weeks he was ordered to sea. He served on the Glacier in Cuban waters during the Spanish war, and was then sent to the Annapolis Academy. Miss Walker lived with the Barbers from December, 1897, until February, 1898.

About 1899 Barber's grandmother died at Glastonbury, leaving him $50,000 in cash and a large country residence, and shortly afterward he began an action in the Superior Court at New Haven for a divorce, alleging that his wife was habitually intemperate. The suit was tried in March, 1900, and resulted in a victory for Mrs. Barber. She testified then that in February, 1898, when she returned to their "corral" at Annapolis one day, she found the door of their apartment locked, and on its being opened, later, Dr. Barber and Miss Walker came out.

Barber appealed from the decision of the Superior Court but was grain defeated.

COWAN A TAMMANY LEADER. Takes the Place of Haveron, Who Retires

From the Battle With Nagle. A peaceful abdication by John Haveron of the Tammany leadership of the southern half of the Thirty-fourth Assembly district is announced. John F. Cowan, Deputy Attorney-General, is to succeed Mr. Haveron. Last year Mr. Haveron and Eugene J. McGuire joined forces in the northern and southern divisions and the northern and southern divisions and defeated ex-Street Cleaning Commissioner Percival E. Nagle and ex-Park Commissioner August Moebus. Mr. Nagle announced a week ago that he and Mr. Moebus were going to make another fight this fall and he didn't care whether Leader Murphy liked it or not. Mr. Murphy had written a letter a short time before saying that he'd like to see Haveron and McGuire returned as members of the Executive returned as members of the Executive returned as members of the Executive Committee.

Mr. Cowan represents the Attorney-General in New York city in the pursuit of milk dealers who do not conduct their business in a manner satisfactory to the State Department of Agriculture. He is a young man and was an Assistant District Attorney under Col. Asa Bird Gardiner. Mr. Haveron's private business, he says, calls on him to quit the leadership. Mr. Cowan will be put in his place at the next meeting of the Pottawatomie Club, the Tammany organization of the district.

MRS. STEPHEN WHITNEY SUES.

Seeks a Divorce in the Colorado Courts. DENVER, Col., June 9 .- Mrs. Stephen Whitney has filed suit for divorce from her husband, accusing him of cruelty and habitual drunkenness. The Whitneys came bitual drunkenness. The Whitneys came here from New York six years ago, on the recommendation of Mr. Whitney's physician. Mrs. Whitney is the daughter of Louis V. Bell, the retired stockbroker and turfman. The Whitneys' home is in Morris Plains, N. J. Their marriage was opposed by both families. They have three children, all boys, who are now with Mr. Whitney's mother in New Jersey. Mr. Whitney is expected here to-morrow or Thursday to file an answer to Mrs. Whitney's complaint.

Stamford May Sue Us for Citizen Train's Illness.

STAMPORD, Conn., June 9.-At the meet ing of the Common Council last night James H. Ferriss, who is chairman of the Committee on Public Health, said that the Committee on Public Health, said that the city of Stamford would hold New York city responsible for the expense Stamford has been under owing to the illness of Citizen George Francis Train, who has been sick with smallpox at the city isolation camp for over two weeks. Mr. Train's illness has cost the city $1,600. He will be discharged to-morrow.

NEW BOOKS

The Yale of Bygone Days.

It is peculiarly fitting that ex-Presi dent of Yale University, Dr. Timothy Dwight, should have written his "Memories of Yale Life and Men" (Dodd, Mead & Co.), for it was in his short administration that almost the last vestiges the of Yale which the graduates remember were swept away to make room for the new Yale of stone and mortar. The passing of the old brick row and the Chapel street fence and the greater part of the famous Yale elms, and with them of the old order of things, will be dated in university story, præside T. Dwight II.

To that old order, however, Dr. Dwight belonged in spite of the innovations he introduced. It is surprising how far back his memories seem to go, for he is not a very old man, even if he was graduated in 1849. But presidents and professors in those days seemed to last for ever, and there were plenty of men with whom young Dwight came into contact as a student whose college career had begun with the century. He was child of the college, for his grandfather had been president, and his own life was passed wholly in the college as teacher and president, so that he came to know nearly every Yale man of note in the last half cen-So his "Memories" is a record of the Yale worthies of the nineteenth century that will delight Yale graduates of today and will instruct the antiquarians of

The memories are chiefly of men, men Dr. Dwight knew as teachers or as col-leagues, from President Day and the elder Silliman and Kingsley and Olmsted to those who are mere names to the newer classes, but are a big part of Yale to most of the graduates, Thacher and Dana and Whitney and Newton.

Those who are inclined to praise the time gone by will read with pleasure of President Woolsey's administration, in the days before "business" presidents. There is room for reflection in these days of specialization by professors and students, and of cutting down or cutting out the college course, on what a man like Prof. Thomas Thacher meant to the Yale men of half a century ago. It breaks out almost involuntarily time and again in Dr. Dwight's "Memories" when he is speaking of other men; we cannot help wishing that he had vielded enough to sentiment to call him "Tommy Thacher," as all who loved him did. The dignity that befits a former president forbade that, however, and possibly Dr. Dwight is a trifle too formal. He has written a valuable and very pleasing book, however, and the portraits which llustrate it are excellent.

Love and Ice Crushers.

For once in the great mess of fiction that has been served up to us we come upon an original idea and a new condiment. In "The Sacrifice of the Shannon" (Frederick A. Stokes Company), Mr. U. Albert Hickman introduces us to the ice fields of the Gulf of St. Lawrence in winter. He has a love story to tell, of course, but that is subsidiary to the Homeric battle of the ice crushers against the Arctic floes

We have a suspicion that the author has taken his characters from real persons, putting in them qualities and romantic ideas that they probably never dreamed of. He has given them life enough, at any rate, to make them thoroughly attractive for the purposes of fiction, and they are conwhether possible or not. He gives us a rattling yacht race, a charming heroine, four or five real live men and a rescue from the ice that carries us along breathlessly.

It may be a bit overdone, but we don't recollect where more personality and life has been put into the steel carcass of a steamship since Mr. Kipling tackled the problem There is an outdoor breeze, too, blowing through the whole story, a breath of the great gulf it describes, that should make it delightful reading to those who can get something like it, and, above all, the stayfor the ocean breezes they cannot enjoy. Mr. Hickman has written a notable story that will be thoroughly enjoyed by all

Mr. Brown is a Southerner and cannot be suspected of intentional sarcasm in exposing the brutal side of Southern ideas of honor. He has written a tale that is interesting and more with a crime which, however extenuated by insanity, is atrocious murder, that no theory of the duelling code can explain If taken to heart it is conceivable that the story might have some effect in suppressing Southern exuberance. has the good taste to put the time of his story long before the civil war, so that no sectional feeling can be aroused by it. It is well worth reading and gives promise of better things in the future.

Since the war with Spain, thanks to the strenuous commander of the Rough Riders, the cowboy has risen from the ranks of the dime novel to that of bound fiction. Mr. Owen Wister has shown in his "The Virginian" what can be made of him by a skilful hand. In "The Log of a Cowboy," by Andy Adams (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.), we have something that sounds a little more like the real thing. It is the story of a great drive of cattle from Texas into Montana, twenty years ago, with all the incidents and adventures that were likely to occur in such an expedition. The narrative is in the first person and has all the marks of verisimilitude. Very likely it is a true story. At any rate, the reader will derive from it a lively sense of what the life Mr. Roosevelt admires is like. There is plenty of action and of adventure in the book, which, if not written by a real cowboy, reads very much as though it had

The Care of Dogs.

Man's firstest first friend, Mr. Kipling recently reminded us, is the dog. Whoever owns a dog, whether a blue-ribbon prize winner or only an ordinary yellow dog, will be glad to know what to do with him when the is off his feed. The information is supplied in a little volume called "Dogs," by E. P. Anshutz (Boericke & Tafel, Philadelphia.) The remedies suggested for dogs who are ill are homosopathic, but the greater number of the suggestions as to their cure has nothing to do with medicine and may be heeded by everybody, regardless of medical pre-
